ITAG presents seminar on “Digital Forensics: What Every Business Needs to Know”

Event held on June 11 at Penn State Great Valley

EXTON _ ITAG is offering a seminar on “Digital Forensics: What Every Business Needs to Know” on Friday, June 11 at Penn State Great Valley.

The seminar will help companies facing a digital forensics investigation. Digital forensics has led to the “smoking gun” in matters involving everything from insurance fraud to murder. Aside from criminal activity, digital investigations are required for internal corporate affairs from unlawful termination and sexual harassment to fraud and theft of company information.

The event takes from 11:45 a.m. until 1:45 p.m. at Penn State Great Valley, Malvern. The cost is $25 and includes lunch. To register, go to www.cceconomicdevelopment.com/register/6-11-10_2.

Nancy White, president, Computer Forensics Analysis and Training Center (CFATC), will introduce a panel of computer forensics experts from business and law enforcement who will intrigue, inform, and guide you through the complex world of digital investigations.

The seminar is part of the Igniting Innovation series. To help stimulate fresh ideas and provide an opportunity for local professionals to connect, Penn State Great Valley and the Chester County Economic Development Council have launched Igniting Innovation, a series of workshops on topics to inform and inspire.
